DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The text of those sections of Title 35, U.S. Code not included in this action can be found in a prior Office action.

Claims 1, 5, 11 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Kawamura et al.

In regard to claims 1 and 5, Kawamura et al discloses an optical scanner having a light source (21), a deflecting unit (24), a scanning optical element (25); and a synchronous detector including a photoreceiver (30) and a synchronous optical element (29) that focus the light beam deflected by the deflecting unit onto the photoreceiver (see Fig. 3), wherein the synchronous optical element satisfies a relationship fm<fd, where fm is a composite focal length of the scanning optical element in a main scanning direction, and fd is a composite focal length of the synchronous optical element in the main scanning direction (see column 6, lines 28-29).

In regard to claim 11, Kawamura et al discloses that a scanning plane is a recording surface (column 2, lines 10-11); thus, the scanning plane (26) is considered as a surface to be scanned of a photoreceptor.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 6-7 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kawamura et al in view of Yoshizawa.

In regard to claim 6, Kawamura et al. discloses an optical scanner having all the features discussed above except for the use of a plurality of light sources, a plurality of deflecting units, and a plurality of scanning optical elements. However, such use is well known in the art. Yoshizawa discloses an optical scanner having light sources (10-C,10-M), deflecting units (3u,3d) and scanning optical elements (4-C,4M); each of the scanning optical elements focuses the light beam deflected by a corresponding one of the deflecting unit onto a corresponding one of a surface (1C,1M) to be scanned (see Fig. 3 and the accompanying text, also see Fig. 6). Thus, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to apply the teaching of Yoshizawa in Kawamura et al by using a plurality of light sources, a plurality of deflecting units, and a plurality of scanning optical elements so as to form a multi-beam scanner so as to reduce scanning time.

In regard to claim 7, see the arrangement of the identical scanning optical elements 4-C and 4-M in Fig. 3.

Claim 6 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kawamura et al in view of Ishihara et al.

Kawamura et al discloses an optical scanner having all the features discussed above except for the use of a plurality of light sources, a plurality of deflecting units, and a plurality of scanning optical elements. However, the use of a plurality of optical scanners each having a light source, a deflecting unit, and a scanning optical element in an image forming apparatus is well known in the art. Ishihara et al discloses the use of a plurality of optical scanners (111,112,113,114) each having a light source (1), a deflecting unit (5) and a scanning optical element (61) in an image forming apparatus (see Figs. 1A and 8, and paragraph 0159). Thus, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to apply the teaching of Ishihara et al in Kawamura et al by using a plurality of optical scanners each has the structure of the optical scanner disclosed in Kawamura et al so as to form a color image apparatus.

Allowable Subject Matter

Claims 2-4, 8-10 and 12-14 are allowed.

The following is a statement of reasons for the indication of allowable subject matter: none of the cited references teaches or fairly suggests the claimed invention having the combined features defined in each of claims 2-4, 8-10 and 12-14.
